

1 2 3 4 5 1 6 7 8 9 0

The Morning Chronicle

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1797.

PRICE SIX-PENCE.

NUMBER 8804.]

BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, NOV. 24.

Several Bills were forwarded in their respective stages.

FINANCE.—SCHEME OF SUPPLY.

The House having resolved itself into a Committee of Supply.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER spoke and sat in substance as follows:—In pursuance of the estimation which I gave upon a former day, I now rise to state to the Committee the general outline of the measures which are proposed as the foundations for raising the Supplies, and for meeting the exigencies of the ensuing year:—As the principle of that part of the intended plan to which I am most desirous to direct the attention of the Committee is new in the financial operations of this country, at least, for more than a century; as it is a principle so important in its nature, and so extensive in its consequences, it is not my intention to call for any decision upon its merit in the prefacing of the business. All that I now mean to state to the Committee, I wish to be considered merely as a note; and a general explanation of a plan that is afterwards to be brought forward. Any minute consideration and particular dispositions I shall omit till the subject is submitted to a detailed discussion, and content myself with a general view of the object proposed; and a general outline of the mode by which it is to be carried into execution. After the facts which are already your possession, after the unanimous resolution which the two Houses of Parliament have passed upon the subject, it would be unnecessary for me to dwell upon the causes which demand your exertions, and the nature of the objects which the supplies you are called upon to provide are intended to secure. The question which you have to consider is of no less importance than by what means you are to provide for the expences, which will be necessary to enable you successfully to resist the avowed intentions of an arrogant foe, to defend your liberties and constitution, to cut off the sources of your wealth, your prosperity, your independence, and your glory. In pledging ourselves to withstand these haughty pretensions, and to defend the blessings we enjoy, we have not acted lightly. In ascertaining our determination to support the honour and the interest of the country at every hazard, we spoke equally the dictates of sober reflection and the language of indignant feeling, our judgment was in concord with our ardour, we declared ourselves ready to meet the difficulty in its fullest extent, and prepared to support our resolution in every extremity. I wish to be understood therefore, that it is upon these principles that the plan which I am now about to explain is founded. I know, that it is upon these principles that Parliament and the Nation have pledged themselves to act. By these principles, and these only, the measures which are to be submitted to your consideration have been framed, and it is upon these principles that their propriety ought to be judged.

Before I proceed to enter more largely into the principles of the plan, which it is my intention to propose, I shall very briefly take a view of the amount of the expence for which it will be necessary to provide. These I shall state under the usual heads, avoiding, in the present stage of the business, all minute details, and confining only the intended supplies which, under the restriction with which it will be guarded, I am disposed to think will be viewed as altogether unexceptionable. After what I have heard from some Gentlemen on former discussions, I cannot expect that the measure to which I shall adduce will encounter no opposition; but I am pretty confident that though not universal, the approbation which it will receive will be very general. The measure, however, is considerably different from that which some Gentlemen conceive. I propose that towards the supplies the Bank shall make an advance to Government. The sum which it is in contemplation thus to raise is neither very large in itself, nor will it be made in such a shape as to deprive the Bank of the certainty of repayment within a short period; if it shall be considered expedient to take off the restriction on payment in cash. That under all the circumstances of our present situation that restriction is necessary I cannot entertain a doubt. I confess that while the war continues in its present shape it is my decided opinion that it would be unwise to discontinue that restriction. It is, however, true that in the present situation of affairs the restriction is prudent, if under the conditions intended to be stipulated with regard to the manner of repayment, this advance will be attended with advantage to the public service without any detriment to the Bank. I am anxious to discover why we should decline an accommodation which, in the present circumstances, and in every particular instance, No scheme can it will be seen that there is no prospect of increase at home, that the situation of the War abroad promises to admit of a diminution; and that, from the general state of affairs, many of the causes which contributed to swell the Extraordinaries of the Army and Navy to operate. The amount of Extraordinaries, then, may be taken at 4,500,000. The charge on the head of Barracks may be eliminated, at 400,000. The expence of Guards and Garrisons, and the general articles included under this head, has already been voted, amounting to 10,112,000. The Ordinance may be taken at 1,300,000, and the various articles of Miscellaneous Service may be rated at 673,000. There remain only two articles to be noticed, the sum of 200,000, appropriated for the reduction of the National Debt, and about 680,000, arising from deficiencies of Grants. From the whole then the Committee will see, that the sum now to be provided for amounts to about 25 millions and a half. Supposing the statement under the head of the Army and Navy to be correct, the expence on these branches will be reduced to the extent of two millions, and a half, and including the reduction on the head of Extraordinaries, the saving upon the whole will amount to the sum of 6,780,000.

Notwithstanding this diminution, however, there still remains the sum of 25 millions and a half to be provided for as the supplies of the ensuing year. Before I proceed to explain the general plan proposed for covering this expence, I shall state the usual articles which compose part of the annual Ways and Means. These are the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund, and the Land, and Marine. The former I shall take along with the profit on the Lottery, at a very small sum as 700,000, making with the Land, and Marine the sum of three millions and a half. There still remains, however, the sum of twenty-two millions to be supplied by some other means. The mode by which this sum is to be raised, forms the great object of consideration. The reduction upon the head of Naval and Military establishment does indeed amount to a very considerable saving. The Committee will see with satisfaction that their expences admit of a diminution below what was necessary in former periods of the war. Pleasing as this circumstance certainly is, I will not disguise, however, that after the sums which have already been added to the national debt, after the burdens which have already been imposed, to raise so large a sum as twenty-two millions is no light matter. But the difficulty is to be explained with a firm determination to exert every effort which the magnitude of the occasion demands, with a firm determination to produce the means by which the struggle is to be supported with vigour and with effect, so long as these continue to be the only course by which we can maintain our national honour, and secure our national safety. After this decided resolution, to render these supplies effective, the next point to be considered is the mode by which the expence is to be defrayed without danger to the sources of our prosperity, and without inconvenience to those who may be called upon to contribute. This is a question of great importance, and it is upon these principles that their propriety ought to be judged.

Before I enter into the statement of that plan, by which it is proposed to meet a considerable part of this expence in a manner rather new in our more recent financial operations, I shall mention one of the intended supplies which, under the restriction with which it will be guarded, I am disposed to think will be viewed as altogether unexceptionable. After what I have heard from some Gentlemen on former discussions, I cannot expect that the measure to which I shall adduce will encounter no opposition; but I am pretty confident that though not universal, the approbation which it will receive will be very general. The measure, however, is considerably different from that which some Gentlemen conceive. I propose that towards the supplies the Bank shall make an advance to Government. The sum which it is in contemplation thus to raise is neither very large in itself, nor will it be made in such a shape as to deprive the Bank of the certainty of repayment within a short period; if it shall be considered expedient to take off the restriction on payment in cash. That under all the circumstances of our present situation that restriction is necessary I cannot entertain a doubt. I confess that while the war continues in its present shape it is my decided opinion that it would be unwise to discontinue that restriction. It is, however, true that in the present situation of affairs the restriction is prudent, if under the conditions intended to be stipulated with regard to the manner of repayment, this advance will be attended with advantage to the public service without any detriment to the Bank. I am anxious to discover why we should decline an accommodation which, in the present circumstances, and in every particular instance, No scheme can wear us out by the embarrassments of the funding system, we shall find that the true mode of preparing ourselves to maintain the contest, with effect and success, is to reduce the advantages which the funding system is calculated to afford within due limits, and to prevent the depreciation of our national securities. We ought to consider how far the efforts we shall exert to prefer the blessings we enjoy will enable us to transmit the inheritance of posterity, unimpaired, with those burthens which would cripple their vigour, which would prevent them from attaining that rank in the scale of nations which their ancestors to long and so gloriously maintained. It is in this point of view that the object of the funding system is to be considered. Whatever objections might have been fairly urged against the object of the funding system, no man can suppose that after the form and shape which it has given to our financial affairs, after the heavy burthen which it has left behind it, we can now recur to the notion of raising in one year the whole of the supplies, which a scale of expence so extensive as ours must require. If such a plan is evidently impracticable, some medium, however, may be found to draw as much advantage from the funding system, as it is fit, consistently with a due regard to posterity, to employ, and at the same time to obviate the evils with which its excess would be attended. We shall may devise some expedient by which we may contribute to the defence of our own cause, and to the supply of our own exigencies, by which we may reduce within equitable limits the accommodation of the funding system, and lay the foundation of that quick redemption which will prevent the dangerous consequences of an overgrown accumulation of our public debt.

Such are the advantages, which the plan I am about to propose endeavours to combine. To guard against the accumulation of the funded debt, and to contrive that share to the support of the struggle in which we are engaged, which our ability will permit without inconvenience to those who are called upon to contribute, appears essentially necessary. The great object of such a practical scheme must be to allot fairly and equally to every class that portion which each ought to bear. As I have already stated, it is my intention to propose, not for your immediate decision, but for your mature deliberation, the plan of raising by a general tax within the year, the sum of seven millions. I am aware that this sum does far exceed anything which has been raised at any former period at one time, but I trust I have spared sufficient reasons to shew that it is a wise and necessary measure. I am sure that whatever temporary sacrifices it may be necessary to make, the Committee will feel that they can best provide for the ultimate success of the struggle by showing that they are determined to be guided by no personal considerations, that while they defend the present blessings they enjoy, they are not regardless of posterity. If the sacrifices required be considered in this view; if they be taken in reference to the objects for which we contend, and the evils which we are labouring to avert, great as they may be compared with former exertions, they must appear very light in the balance.

It will be observed that there will be 12 millions out of the 18, still to be provided for in the way of Loan. At present I state this circumstance merely in the cursory review I have taken of the whole supplies. In what manner it will be done must depend upon the views which the progress of affairs may afterwards suggest. Certain parts of this sum would probably be raised on different terms. Whatever part of it might be covered by the produce of the sinking fund, may be borrowed at permanent debt, providing for its redemption on the same terms with the other permanent debt; other parts again may be borrowed upon a much earlier scheme of redemption. But to proceed to the mode by which it is proposed to raise this sum of seven millions.

It has been understood for a considerable time that a great increase of the Affected Taxes was in agitation. I shall state the reasons why this branch of the revenue has been chosen as best calculated to combine the advantages which I have already explained as desirable in the intended plan. The objects to be attained in the mode of executing this scheme are threefold. One great point is, that the plan should be diffused as exclusively as possible; that it should be regulated as fairly and equally as possible, without the necessity of such an inviolation of property as the customs, the manners, and the pursuits of the people would render odious and vexatious. This it should exclude those who are liable to contribute or furnish means of relief to those whose situation will entitle them to favour and exemption; that it should distinguish the gradation of classes; that it should admit of those abatements which, in particular instances, it might be prudent to make in the portion of those who are liable under its general principles. I am aware that no measure can be devised adequately to provide for all these objects in all their details, and in every particular instance. No scheme can from such a contribution as the present, will thus be obviated in a striking manner. Those who contribute to the Affected Taxes comprise a number of about 7 and 800,000 housekeepers and masters of families, including a population of nearly four millions, on whom the sum will be raised. Those who are those who will be entitled to exemption, those who are already not included at all, on account of their poverty, or those who for the same reason, are discharged from payment. Whether this description includes the artificers and labourers who have a fair claim to exemption, there is at least reason to believe from the best information that can be collected, 500,000 housekeepers and masters of families, covering a population of between two and three millions, are so comprehended. Such is the extent of the total exemption. The next object is, to confide the effect of the contribution upon those classes on which it would be raised. The Affected Taxes so far as can be ascertained, amount to a sum of about 2,700,000. This sum is collected upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of about 1,500,000. This sum is calculated upon the head of 7 or 800,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that about 200 do not contribute more than 150,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late addition, but in and about £60,000, arising from deficiencies of Grants. From the whole then the Committee will set, that the sum now to be provided for amounts to about £5 millions and a half. Supposing the statements under the head of the Army and Navy to be correct, the expence of these branches will be reduced to the extent of two millions and a half, and including the reduction on the head of Extraordinarys, the saving upon the whole will amount to the sum of £6,700,000.

Notwithstanding this diminution, however, there will remain the sum of £2 millions and a half to be provided for, as the supplies of the ensuing year. Before I proceed to explain the general plan proposed for covering this expence, I shall state the usual articles which compose part of the annual Way and Means. These are the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund, and the Land and Mail. The former I shall take along with the profits on the Lottery, at so very small a sum as £60,000, making with the Land and Mail, the sum of three millions and a half. There will remains, however, the sum of twenty-two millions to be supplied by some other means. The mode by which this sum is to be raised, forms the great object of consideration. The reduction upon the head of naval and military establishment does indeed amount to a very considerable saving. The Committee will see with satisfaction that their expences admit of a diminution below what was necessary in some former periods of the war. Pleasing as this circumstance certainly is, I will not disguise, however, that after the sums which have already been added to the national debt, after the burdens which have already been imposed, to raise so large a sum as twenty-two millions, is no light matter. But the difficulty is to be examined with a firm determination to exert every effort which the magnitude of the occasion demands, with a firm determination to produce the means by which the struggle is to be supported with vigour and effect, so long as these continue to be the only course by which we can maintain our national honour, and secure our national safety. After this decided resolution, to render their supplies effective, the next point to be considered is the mode by which the expence is to be defrayed without danger to the sources of our prosperity, and without inconvenience to those who may be called upon to contribute.

The first point to be considered is, whether the funding system, in its origin, no man can suppose that after the form and shape which it has given to our financial affairs, after the heavy burthen which it has left behind it, we can now recur to the notion of raising in one year the whole of the supplies which a scale of expence so expensive as ours must require. If such a plan is evidently impracticable, some method, however, may be found to draw as much advantage from the funding system, as it is, sufficiently, with a due regard for posterity, to employ, and at the same time to obviate the evils with which its excess would be attended. We will may devise some expedient by which we may contribute to the defence of our own cause, and to the supply of our own exigencies, by which we may reduce within equitable limits the accommodation of the funding system, and lay the foundation of that quick redemption which will prevent the dangerous consequences of an overgrown accumulation of our public debt.

Such are the advantages which the plan I am about to propose endeavours to combine. To guard against the accumulation of the funded debt, and to contribute that share to the support of the struggle in which we are engaged, which our ability will permit without inconvenience to those who are called upon to contribute, appears essentially necessary. The great object of such a practical scheme must be to allot fairly and equally to every class that portion which each ought to bear. As I have already stated then, it is my intention to propose, not for your immediate decision, but for your mature deliberation, the plan of raising by a general tax within the year, the sum of seven millions. I am aware that this sum does far exceed anything which has been raised at any former period at one time, but I trust I have stated sufficient reasons to shew that it is a wise and necessary measure. I am sure that whatever temporary sacrifices it may be necessary to make, the Committee will feel that they can best provide for the ultimate success of the struggle by showing that they are determined to be guided by no personal considerations, that while they defend the present blessings they enjoy, they are not regardless of posterity. If the sacrifices required be considered in this view; if they be taken in reference to the objects for which we contend, and the evils which we are labouring to avert, great as they may be compared with former exertions, they will increase the facility of applying the resources which may be found proper to help us. The extent of the total exemption. The next object then is, to consider the effect of the contribution upon those classes on which it would be raised. The Assessed Taxes so far as can be ascertained, amount to a sum of about £2,700,000. This sum as collected is levied upon 7,918,000 householders, of whom it is ascertained that 400,000 do not contribute more than £50,000. This indeed is a little increased by the late additions, but in a very small proportion, as these additions chiefly affect those who belong to the superior classes. The proposed additional assessment then, upon the whole contributors, would amount on the whole sum of Assessed Taxes, to something less than a treble contribution. Why it will be something less than treble, which would be about eight millions, will be explained in the sequel. When we find that 400,000 householders contribute only £50,000, we shall see how small a part of the additional share will fall upon those who are most entitled to mitigation. In this extensive apportionment too, we shall discover the modifications which it may be necessary to make, and the means to adapt it to the ability of the contributors. The Assessed Taxes obviously divide themselves into two classes. Those which in a great measure applied to inhabited houses, consisted of three duties, that which was known by the name of the Old Duty, the Window Duty, and the Commutation Duty, first imposed last war, and regulated in 1788; and of the different per cents. since imposed, which may amount to about £1,400,000. out of two millions and a half. In that both the high and the low classes were included, but among the latter £60,000 contributed only £50,000. The other consists of optional consumptions and luxury—the duty on servants, carriages, horses for pleasure, and that class of horses employed in agriculture, the proprietors of whom, in the present state of the country, one of the most opulent classes which it contains, could not be injured by such an addition to the moderate rate which is now paid. It will readily occur that where there are houses which do not contribute for the optional, or class of luxury, there the inhabitant must be held entitled to favour and mitigation. On these, then, the burden will fall much more lightly than on those, such as we ourselves, and those who contribute to both divisions of the assited taxes. There is another distinction likewise which will increase the facility of applying the resources which may be found proper to help us. The

to be judged;—
Before I enter into the statement of that plan by which it is proposed to meet a considerable part of this expence in a manner rather new in our more recent financial operations, I shall mention one of the intended supplies which, under the restriction with which it will be guarded, I am disposed to think will be viewed as altogether unexceptionable. After what I have heard from some Gentlemen on former discussions, I cannot expect that the measure to which I allude will encounter no opposition; but I am pretty confident that though not universal, the approbation which it will receive will be very general. This measure, however, is considerably different from that which some Gentlemen conceive. I propose that towards the supplies the Bank shall make an advance to Government. The sum which it is in contemplation thus to raise is neither very large in itself, nor will it be made in such a shape as to deprive the Bank of the certainty of repayment within a short period, if it shall be considered expedient to take off the restriction on payment in cash. That under all the circumstances of our present situation that restriction is necessary I cannot entertain a doubt. I confess that while the war continues in its present shape it is my decided opinion that it would be unwise to discontinue that restriction. If, however, any unforeseen events of the war, or if the return of peace should supersede that necessity, the advances which it is proposed should be made by the Bank are to be upon such conditions as shall render them available for the payment of their debt. If such a measure should meet with the approbation of Parliament the Bank will confess to make the advance. It is clear then that in the present situation of affairs the restriction is prudent, if under the conditions intended to be stipulated with regard to the manner of repayment this advance will be attended with advantage to the public service without any detriment to the Bank. I am at a loss to discover why we should decline an accommodation which, in the present circumstances of the Country, would prove to material relief.—The sum of three millions then the Bank will agree to advance on Exchequer Bills, to be repaid at a short period, capable of being prolonged if nothing occurs to render that extension inexpedient, to be paid by the Bank if any change in their affairs shall render it necessary.

The sum which will be on their monthly standing debt of 1,500,000l. to cover the excess of the estimates will likewise be a small falling due in the year following, and the cash provision will be received in the usual way.

It will appear very light in the balance.

It will be observed that there will be 12 millions out of the 18 millions to be provided for in the way of Loan. At present I state this circumstance merely in the cursory review I have taken of the whole supplies. In what manner it will be done must depend upon the views which the progress of affairs may afterwards suggest. Certain parts of this sum would probably be raised on different terms. Whatever part of it might be covered by the produce of the sinking fund may be borrowed as permanent debt, providing for its redemption on the same terms with the other permanent debt; otherwise again may be borrowed upon a much easier scheme of redemption. But to proceed to the mode by which it is proposed to raise this sum of seven millions.

It has been understood for a considerable time that a great encroachment of the Assessed Taxes was in agitation. I shall state the reasons why this branch of the revenue has been chosen as best calculated to combine the advantages which I have already explained as desirable in the intended plan. The object to be attained in the mode of executing this Scheme are threefold. One great point is, that the sum should be diffused as extensively as possible; that it should be regulated as fairly and equally as possible, without the necessity of such an investigation of property as the customs, the manners, and the pursuits of the people would render odious and vexatious. That it should exclude those who are least able to contribute or furnish means of relief to those whose situation most entitles them to favour and exemption; that it should distinguish the gradations of classes; that it should admit of those abatements which, in particular instances, it might be prudent to make in the portion of those who might be liable under its general principles. I am aware that no measure can be devised adequately to provide for all these objects in all their details and in every particular instance. No scheme can be practically carried into execution, in any financial arrangement, much more in such a one as the present, with such perfect dispositions as to guard against every possible inconvenience, and to render every individual application unexceptionable. These general principles, however, must be kept in view in every practical plan, and the great question is,

On the second description, there may be obtained about 3,000,000l. at the triple rate. Allowing ded in the supplies to be 39,000,000, is all that enters supplies under this branch

Army, excepting only Barracks, has likewise been voted.
Extraordinaries will be it-is; but, so far as can be collected, drawn, this article may besides the Vote of Credit, be 1,300,000, at the end of the year 1798.
The amount of the deficiency for the year 1798,

defeated us, and kept none of their engagements. This argument, if true, might go a good way towards shewing that we ought to have no confidence in them; but until he shews some instances of our want of good faith, I apprehend it does not prove that they have no confidence in us, and proves pretty nearly as much as the argument, that it is necessary that I ought to possess the confidence of his Majesty's enemies in France.

I think I am entitled now, in my turn, since the Honourable Gentleman has opposed the whole system of the plan which I have proposed, and especially as he is so much, and as it were exclusively the friend of his country, to ask him, whether he has a better, or any in its stead? for he has not stated any. Perhaps he has not had time to digest a proper plan; if he has any in contemplation, he cannot fairly object to the proposal which I make now, since he is to have time to prepare his own, which I trust will be much better. But the Honourable Gentleman says, that if this plan should have been brought forward at all, it should have been brought forward much sooner. He acknowledges, that in cases of great danger, great efforts ought to be made. Now, I think, that in our former situation we were not so much in danger as we are at present; if we do not make great resistance, and therefore, it appears to me to be more sensible to make great efforts in time when they are necessary, than to make them when the circumstances of the time do not call for them, especially, when by your financial operation you are likely to bring the contest to a happy termination. But the Honourable Gentleman says, that this plan is to shew that we are at the end of our resources. If he thought so, he might have spared himself the trouble of pronouncing a panegyric upon these resources, in the course of his speech this night. The Honourable Gentleman says, that this plan shews to the world that we are at the end of our funding system. The manner in which persons possessed of capital in different parts of the country have acted in investing their property in your funds, is no proof that moneyed men think so, but proves, on the contrary, the confidence they have in your resources, and proves also, that wealth is generally diffused all over the country. This wealth is manifested in the improvement of your agriculture, in your buildings, in your canals, in your inclosures; all these, I say, prove that you possess at this moment the confidence of moneyed men, that there is at this moment, more wealth, than there was at any former period in this country.

Mr. TIRNEY.—With whatever preparation I may have come to this House to-night, I think I may have credit for not having come prepared against a series of misrepresentation to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has chosen to indulge himself. The events of this night have shewn that either the Right Honourable Gentleman or myself, came in a state of preparation to the House upon this occasion: who has prepared himself most against possible events, let the Committee judge. Much of what he has said does not apply to me. He appears to have got by heart a set of fine flourishing sentences to chaffie any body who should doubt the excellence of his plan. This strange rant was meant for somebody, not for me, molt certainly, for in my life I never uttered a sentence in this House for or against the system or principles of the French. He must therefore have meant what he said upon that subject against somebody else. He has taken much pains to prove that what I said against the productiveness of the Revenue was ill founded. I never said a word upon that either, and therefore that part of his flourish must have been intended for somebody else. What I said upon the subject was this: Unless the Right Honourable Gentleman could shew that this impost could be had out of the populace and superfluous wealth of the country, it must be taken from the capital of some persons whose capital employs the artificer or labourer in the country, and consequently he must diminish the productive power of the country. Not one syllable came from him upon the nature of what he had said upon that subject, and to which he pretended his other vices to be confined as answers.

With respect to what the Honourable Gentleman has said concerning the confidence of the enemy, I can only oblige that he kindled into a blaze without having any fuel from me; away he went with his grand flourish to shew that he never had the confidence of his enemies. I never said he had. I may claim credit for not being so very full as to say so. I never did say so. What I said was this: that the enemy, knowing that I had acted with a Cabinet, one half of which was hostile to him in general principles of policy, and agreeing with him in nothing but hatred to the French Revolution, could never have any confidence in him with regard to his professed pacific intentions. Why should his attempt to shew upon me an expression to contrary to common sense? I said that he was not received in any Court in Europe as a Minister. He gives me a dissertation on the daughter of his friends who sit around him—that he calls an answer.

The last, I suppose, is his best argument. There we have come to the end of our debate. There was no occasion for any such pains, for I never said we were come to the end of our resources, nor anything like it; I said, on the contrary, you have great resources, and I said I was glad to see it. When I hope he will extend it to all Members of Parliament, and that he himself, and the Honourable Friend, will not shew themselves backward to contribute, nor do I say why the Honourable Friend is not at an end. I again in the same situation? Upon this subject, I feel a good deal, and if the Minister is not too fond of his own judgment I will refer him to a book that is worthy of his attention—I mean the work of Mons. De Calonne. I do not desire him to read all that is written in France upon that subject; but I will venture to recommend that work to his perusal. It was written upon the subject of a National Bank, and for the information of the late King of France.

I enterain reflecting the measure now under consideration. The principal sentiment with which I am impressed, is the regret that we should be reduced to such a desperate extremity. The measure now in contemplation was new in its nature, and its operation might be attended with consequences the mischief of which it was impossible to foresee. The Right Honourable Gentleman who proposed it, and the House who seemed disposed to adopt it, have frequently been loud in their invectives against every innovation, especially such as had been adopted in France; they used this argument of the danger of novelty against the proceedings in France, and against any attempt at Parliamentary Reform at Home. With what consistency could they now adopt a measure equally objectionable for its novelty, and for it having been a favourite measure with the French, who conduct on all occasions they are ready to censure. Neither, Sir, can I believe that the war now perfidly in is a war of the nature which the Right Honourable Gentleman describes it to be; a war for the extinction of our Constitution, and of our very existence as a nation—it is no such war; it goes to a war for indemnities; and as such it may be easily brought to a conclusion. We have at length found our persons in France with whom we can treat, and we should not desist from negotiation from any light motives, or from the non attainment of a trivial point. It is with sorrow I have observed the Right Honourable Gentleman exerting his powerful eloquence to inflame the passions of the House; it is with pain I have heard him exciting our hatred and indignation at the principles which the French profess; nor, from all that I have heard and read, have I ever, as yet learned, why peace may not be attained. What do we require? Do not we ask for indemnities at the expence of that very power for whose protection the war has been originally undertaken? Is it from the French, we attempt to extort indemnities? No; but from Holland, whom we have dragged and dragooned into the war. The Dutch were plundered by the French, and the conduct of the French towards them we very justly condemned. By insisting on indemnities from that quarter, do we not irritate what we condemn in others? Do we not perfidiously sacrifice to the interest of justice? nor policy can justify? Had I been in the House when this subject was more immediately under discussion, I would not have hesitated to declare this to be my opinion. We should not stick too rigidly to indemnities; we at least ought to compare them with the value of what we are going to sacrifice in an uncertain effort to obtain them—did we not, indeed, displease to treat for peace in this temper and spirit, we very likely might succeed in our endeavours. But if the enemy still rejected our pacific offers, then indeed, all the energies of Great Britain should be exerted in order to compel them to accept what they so perniciously and obstinately refused.

Mr. Secretary DUNDAS.—We are told by the Honourable Gentleman who spoke last, that had he been in the House on a former occasion, he would have declared an opinion contrary to that which the House then entertained. But I would inform the Honourable Gentleman why he was not then in his place, and why now he would come down to discuss, by his individual opinion, the unanimity with which the House assented to the Address that was moved to his Majesty? Was it becoming in him now to attempt to contradict the general sentiment of the House? I cannot think it is, Sir; and above all I would beg leave to entreat and implore the Members of this House to desist from stirring questions from which so much mischief may arise, which attended the monopoly of borrowing money for it leads to the centering in a few individuals all those loans and public contracts, by which a few enrich themselves at the expence of the many. That monopoly of borrowing money appears to me to be for society the worst system that the wit of man ever devised.

These are my sentiments upon the general view of this subject, although to deliver them was not the main purpose of my rising. I rise for the purpose chiefly of giving notice, that if his Majesty's Chancellor of the Exchequer thinks proper to persevere in this plan, I shall think it my duty to be employed in agriculture, in commerce, in the way of an active capital, not for the individual who owns it, but for the society, and creates all those evils which attended the monopoly of borrowing money for it leads to the centering in a few individuals all those loans and public contracts, by which a few enrich themselves at the expence of the many.

General BERTHIER was dispatched from Paris on the 15th inst. to carry to Ratisbon the ratification of the treaty of peace with the EMPEROR.

The Executive Directory has issued an arrest to the Central Administrations to make lists of the Priests who have not taken the oath of hatred to Royalty. The National Council of Bishops and Priests closed their sitting upon the 12th instant.

THOMAS PAIXHAN is still at Paris, he has published a pamphlet upon the Revolution of the 14th Fructidor. General DESAIX is arrived at Paris, to concert with the Minister at War the organization of the Army of England.

The Minister of the Marine and Colonies addressed to the Officers and Sailors of the Fleets of France a circular letter, in which he informed them that now it devolved on them to assert the liberties of France, that the French armies had conquered every thing by land, and that they had only their inveterate enemy, the English, to encounter at sea. It accredits to the English all their calamities and concludes with these words—"Perish the English Government! Long live the Republic!"

The Minister of the Interior has addressed a circular letter to the Administration, on the necessity of organizing every where the political institutions to appropriate the Republican sentiments to bring into action the new calendar, to regulate the Ministry of all the different forms of government, to direct new representations to the Directors, and to open all public works and all public places upon that day, to establish public exercises and games, and to direct each Drama to be performed upon the Theatres as may tend to reform public morals, and to animate and keep alive the Republican spirit.

A Telegraph is established between Paris and Strasburgh, by which the French Directory will receive information of the proceedings of the Congress of Ratisbon, and thus they have of the Exchequer would be attended with the fatigues which he agreed to promise to the public.

The CHIEF-EXECUTOR, after a few words, to reply to Mr. Wigley, gave notice that on Wednesday next he would move, That the Propositions which he had this night submitted to the Committee should be then taken into further consideration.

The Bill for restricting the Cash Payments of the Bank was then read a third time, and passed.

The Report of the Small Notes Bill was received, the Amendment agreed to, and the Bill was then ordered to be received tomorrow.

The Report of the Land and Mail Tax Bill was also received.

The Committee of Ways and Means was ordered to sit on Monday; also the Committee of Supply.

Adjourned.

THE MORNING CHRONICLE,

LONDON.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13.

We last night received, by express, the French Journals up to Wednesday last, the 2d instant, inclusive, and we find, in the official paper of the Directory, the observations that have been made on the British documents of the Negotiations at Lille. They have been extremely concise in their answer—They content themselves with asking, "If it was not a dereliction of a counter project to a project in blanks?" was it not, in other words, a positive refusal to commence the Negotiations? The French Journals, however, have not failed to imitate the example of our own. All the inflammatory harangues, and the vehement expostions which have been used against France by Ministers and their friends, hath been faithfully narrated, and presented to the French People as proofs of the implacable spirit of their only remaining enemy, the Government of Great Britain. Wherever the blame may lie of the continuance of hostilities, there is at least a most amicable coincidence in the means which both Governments employ for carrying on the War.

We copy from the Années Politiques of Wednesday last, the 2d instant, the following paragraph:

"If we may trust to rumour, the Directory has not altogether renounced the hope of preventing the enormous expenses, and the incalculable misfortunes which might result to the two countries from the terrible shock which is in preparation, and they have been deliberating within these few days past on the means of secretly transmitting to the English Ministry their final pacific propositions." This paragraph, which we have copied literally, is not countenanced by any similar report in any of the other Journals; but last night, we understand, Ministers did certainly receive an express from Paris. It is most probable, however, that this relates simply to the new Commission for exchange of prisoners.

We are prevented by the length and importance of the proceedings in our own Parliament from going into the detail of the French news. It however is extremely unimportant. No events of any interest have taken place in the vast territory of the Republic; perfect tranquillity seems every where to prevail.

General BERTHIER was dispatched from Paris on the 15th inst. to carry to Ratisbon the ratification of the treaty of peace with the EMPEROR.

The Executive Directory has issued an arrest to the Central Administrations to make lists of the Priests who have not taken the oath of hatred to Royalty. The National Council of Bishops and Priests closed their sitting upon the 12th instant.

THOMAS PAIXHAN is still at Paris, he has published a pamphlet upon the Revolution of the 14th Fructidor.

General DESAIX is arrived at Paris, to concert with the Minister at War the organization of the Army of England.

The Minister of the Marine and Colonies addressed to the Officers and Sailors of the Fleets of France a circular letter, in which he informed them that now it devolved on them to assert the liberties of France, that the French armies had conquered every thing by land, and that they had only their inveterate enemy, the English, to encounter at sea. It accredits to the English all their calamities and concludes with these words—"Perish the English Government! Long live the Republic!"

The Minister of the Interior has addressed a circular letter to the Administration, on the necessity of organizing every where the political institutions to appropriate the Republican sentiments to bring into action the new calendar, to regulate the Ministry of all the different forms of government, to direct new representations to the Directors, and to open all public works and all public places upon that day, to establish public exercises and games, and to direct each Drama to be performed upon the Theatres as may tend to reform public morals, and to animate and keep alive the Republican spirit.

A Telegraph is established between Paris and Strasburgh, by which the French Directory will receive information of the proceedings of the Congress of Ratisbon, and thus they have

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11.

1797.

A.D.

1797.

A.D.