THE PREFACE.

THESE Memoirs of Mr. Gray coming out at this juncture, may seem design'd to Aggravate the present Calamities of the Nation, and like Cato rather Inflamm, then heal the Wound; but I assure you, they are rather assign'd to Alleviate then Aggravate, they shew you how the French and Dutch have been, as great if not greater fools than We, Solatium est Miseris Multos haberes pares.

I was

The P R E F A C E.

I was lately in Holland, where its Incredible the Desolation their Assurances have made in almost every Town, the famous Exchange in Amsterdam where Bills of Exchange could be Discounted on all the habitable parts of the Earth, is now of no other use, but to serve Merchants at Change time, to give reasons to their Creditors, why they cannot Pay, and so keep the Duans from their Doors; at Hamburg it is but something better, but in France there is no Credit, nor hardly any Money to be seen, even on the great Roads you can hardly have the common necessaries of Life, till they see whether you are to pay in Money or Paper. The reasons of all this you will find in the following Memoirs, which are written with such an air of sincerity and Truth, neither Satyr nor Panegirick, as must give them Credit with all Unbiassed Persons. One thing thing indeed is amazing, that after the Money of all Europe has been dancing for three Years to Mr. LAWS Fidle, all of a sudden it vanish'd, and no body knows what is become of it, every Country complains equally of the Want of it.

Our Third and Fourth Subscriptions in the South-Sea drew it from the Mississippi, and our pretending to make Dividends at a fixed Price, which all the World saw we were not able to do, without breaking in upon the Capital, drove it again from us, but whither none but Mr. Knight and some of the Directors can tell. Perhaps it is still in England, and boarded up till the Proceedings of this Parliament are over, if so, so much the better for us, for if it were any where else I see no reason any Nation has to conceal so Glorious a Guest; let us then hope the best, and comfort comfort our selves, that we are not quite so bad as our Neighbours.

I am credibly informed, that Mr. Law offer'd his Paper Credit Scheme to the Lord Godolphin, before he carry'd it down to the Parliament of Scotland; that able Minister, after examining it, told Mr. Law, That it was a fine and nice Calculation, had a plausible Face, but could never be put in Execution under a limited Government; that it would want the Authority of an absolute Prince to carry it through; and made him a very handsome Present for his Ingenuity.

How it came so soon to fail under a despotick Government was, that the Government had got its End; the Publick Debts were paid off by it, and they had no farther Occasion for it; yet it had fallen more gently and more gradually, if Mr. Law had continued at

at the Head of his own Scheme; but being put into Hands that were Enemies to it from the Beginning, it looked as if the Court, having gain'd their own End, desired its speedy Destruction.

The Populace, having parted with their ready Money for Paper, and seeing the Paper tumbling down grew outrageous; but instead of looking to the Government, by whose Edicts the Paper was establish'd, their whole Rage was bent against the Person of Mr. Law, the Inventor of it; they now look'd upon him, who but some Months before they call'd The Saviour of France, to be the Instrument of their Ruin and Destruction; his Lady and Daughter were insulted as they pass'd through the Streets in their Coach, and he, for the Security of his Person, was obliged to take Sanctuary in the Palais-Royal, the Residence of the Regent:

The P R E F A C E.

gent: It had been too cruel in the Government to have expos'd a Person to the Resentment of the Populace, who had done so much Service to the Crown by ruining the People; altho' there were several fresh Examples of the Punishment of those Partisans, that robb'd the Nation under Lewis the XIVth; but they robb'd the King, as well as the People, and occasion'd those Debts, which Mr. Law paid; it was therefore thought proper, to give him a safe and private Retreat: He was invited by the Duke de Bourbon to his Country Seat at Chantilly, under Pretence of a Party of Pleasure; which that Prince often makes thither; and from thence, in the Prince's own Post-Chaises, with very good Passports, he got to Bruxelles, although he very near ran the Risk of being sent back from Valenciennes, where a Gentleman knew him, and

The P R E F A C E.

and his Passport being made in the Name of Jardin, the Governor had certainly sent him back, if the Intendant of Maubege had not by Chance came thither, and sav'd him; and, if he had, no Guards they could send with him could have sav'd him from the Fury of the Populace: He always made a good Figure, wherever he went, and was very well receiv'd by the Marquis de Prie, Governor of the Austrian Netherlands: His Friends in Holland, hearing of his Arrival at Brussels, were in Hopes that his Fourney was intended thither, to set his Affairs right at Amsterdam, where several Merchants had stopt Payment, purely on his Account, as also Mr. Midleton had done at London; and all the Stocks, as well as Bubbles, rose extreamly on the Exchange at Amsterdam, on hearing of his Arrival in the Netherlands;
B but,

The P R E F A C E.

but, to their great Disappointment, he steer'd his Course quite another Way, and through Germany and the Tirol got to Venice.

Venice is a Place, where an unhappy Man, with a great deal of Money, may pass his Time in the greatest Security; every Nobleman's Palace there is a Protection from Debt; and Mr. Law, through the great Acquaintance he had acquir'd when he liv'd there before, as well as during his Greatness in France, could not miss of a general Protection, without putting himself to the Charge of buying a Nobility, which the News-Writers from thence seem to make the World believe: He is now safe in his Person; but is not so in his Family: His Lady is turn'd out of the Palace of Mazarin at Paris, which he had purchas'd; his Creditors petition to seize his Effects and Moveables,

and she is reduc'd even to sell her Coach and Horses: Nor does it fare better with his Brother, whose History is also incerted in these Memoirs; the small Remains of his Fortunes, which he had carry'd off to his Apartment at Versailles, are seiz'd upon by the Government; his Estates which he had purchas'd in Scotland seiz'd upon by his Creditors, and his Person confin'd, first to the Bastille, and then carry'd to Fort L'Eveque, one of the severest Prisons in France, from whence he will be happy, if he escapes with Shoes to his Feet.

About two Years ago there was a Pamphlet writ by Mr. Smith, Judge-Advocate for New-England, and now in the same Station for Carolina, shewing the Danger of our Plantations in America from the French Settlements on the Mississippi; the Author of these

The P R E F A C E.

Memoirs shews, how groundless these Apprehensions are, that the Louisiana runs through a Country, as big as all Europe, to the French Settlements in Canada, on the Back of our Plantations, is true; but what a dismal Country that is, and how inhabited, he is the best Judge, because he was there, and how impracticable it will be ever to make any thing of it.

There is a Ridge of Mountains that run from Cape Florida, on the South to the River St. Lawrence on the North, which environ the English Plantations, like a Wall, and secures them from the Incurfions of these Nations of Indians, that inhabit on the other Side of the Mountains; all France hath not People enough to reduce them, and if they should, the Country is hardly worth keeping, when they have got it.

I

The P R E F A C E.

I will not detain my Reader any longer from the Reading of the History itself, only will conclude with observing, that it will be surprizing to Posterity, to find two Men of low Birth shine in the Meridian of London, at the same Time with two of as low Birth at Paris; and that they should both vanish away like a Vapour, and all fall together; I mean the two Craggs and the two Laws.

Craggs the Elder was born in the Bishoprick of Durham; on his first coming to London was entertain'd in the Family of the Duke of York, under the then Cofferer of his Royal Highness's Household; he was afterwards in the Service of the then Earl of Peterborough, and on his Daughter's marrying the Duke of Norfolk, Mr. Craggs came to the Management of that Duke's Affairs; he then turn'd
Solicitor

The PREFACE.

Solicitor for the Old East India Company, was a Contractor for Cloathing the Army, and was sent Prisoner by the Parliament to the Tower: He got into the Duke and Dutchess of Marlborough's Favour, had the Management of all their private Affairs; and when his Grace was Master of the Ordinance, Mr. Craggs was made Clerk to the Dalwerys; and on the King's Accession to the Throne, Joint-Postmaster-General.

Young Craggs, the Son of the former, was bred up at Mr. Lefevre's School at Chelsea, and then sent to Hanover, where he past a good Part of his younger Days; from thence went to the Court of Turin, under that great and able Minister Mr. Hill, and was afterwards, by the Queen, sent to Barcelona, Envoy to the present Emperor, under that great Man Mr. Stanhope; with these great Helps, and the Duke of Marlborough's Favour, and having the Honour of carrying the first News from the Lords Justices of the Queen's Death to Hanover, he was, upon his Majesty's Accession to the Throne, made Cofferer to the Prince, Secretary at War, and, at last, Secretary of State.

He was a very fine Gentleman, of a good Address, and had gain'd a very great Reputation in the House of Commons: He was the youngest Secretary of State that can be parrallel'd in History; yet, by his Application and Assiduity, his Easiness of Access and Affability, he pleas'd every Body: He was also a Person of great Gallantry, and had very good Success with the Ladies; but the Father and Son were unhappily at the Head of the South Sea Scheme, as the Laws were at Paris; and Fate carry'd them off to the other World,

The P R E F A C E.

World, almost together, just as the Parliament were upon their Inquiry into the Mismanagements, and have hardly left any of the Name behind them. The Laws it is true are not dead; but, when these Memoirs have led you thro' all the Steps of their Life and Grandeur, and have brought them down to their primitive Nothing, one may call it a civil Dying.

Life and Character OF THE Great Mr. LAW and his Brother at Paris.

WITH THE RISE and FALL of the MISSISSIPPI.

PEOPLE will hardly believe, but that the Annals of France, England and Holland will confirm it, That after EUROPE had languished for Twenty six Years under the most Expensive War that ever it felt, and had got a little Repose by the Peace of Utrecht; a single Gentleman of mean Parantage, a Foreigner to each of these Countries, having no other Support but the Production of his own Brain, should involve them all Three into greater Calamities in two Years, than the War did in Twenty six.

C ever

2 The Rise and Fall

THAT he should undertake and effectuate the Payment of those immense Debts Lewis the XIVth left at his Death, that he should ingross in a few Months all the Ready Money of France into his Coffers; that England, that trading and flourishing Kingdom should lay aside their foreign Traffick to imitate his Scheme; and that wise Republick of Holland, who fifty Years ago disputed the Sovereignty of the Seas,

of the Mississippi. 3

Seas, should suffer their Men of War to rot in their Harbour, lay up their Merchantmen, that brought in their daily Subsistence, and run headlong upon their Exchanges after his Paper Kite, is what (I say) Posterity will hardly believe, without the undoubted Proofs from their Annals of this Universal Infatuation.

I, WHO was intimate with Mr. LAW from his first setting out from Scotland, the Place of his Nativity, was a Writer in his Comptoir at Paris, when he was Comptroller-General there; was sent Super-cargo to the first Embarkation to the MISSISSIPPI, being now happily returned to my own native Country, think it a Duty I owe to the Place of my Nativity, to give them the true History of that Gentlemen, in all the Steps of his Life; and to draw the Curtain which hath so long hid from their View the pernicious Designs of Paper Credit.

Mr. LAW was born at Edinburgh in Scotland about the Year 1670, his Father was a Working Silver-Smith in that City, of good Reputation, and educated this eldest Son John as a Gentleman ; his younger Son William, he brought up in his own Trade: John arriving to Man's Estate at the Revolution, went to London to push his Fortune ; he was handsome, tall, with a good Address, and had a particular Talent of pleasing the Ladies ; he frequented the Bath, Tunbridge, and all other Places of Pleasure ; but as his Fortune was not

not able to support the Expence of these Places, he turned his Head to Gaming, in order to make that carry on the other. No Man understood Calculation and Numbers better than he ; he was the first Man in England that was at the Pains to find out why Seven to Four or Ten, was Two to One at Hazard, Seven to Eight Six to Five, and so on in all the other Chances of the Dice, which he bringing to Demonstration, was receiv'd amongst the most eminent Gamesters, and grew a noted Man that way ; he always dress'd well, and making a good Figure in all publick Places, was by the Town dubbed Beau LAW ---- About two Years after his arrival at London, another Beau sprung up, very far inferior to him, either in Parts

6 The Rise and Fall

Parts or Address, call'd Beau WILSON; this Gentleman had been an Ensign in Flanders, but whether the Trenches were too cold for his Constitution, or that he did not like Fighting, he quitted his Commission and returned to London, where, to the Surprize of all the Town, he commenc'd Beau; he took a great House, furnish'd it richly, kept his Coach and Six, had abundance of Horses in Body Cloaths, kept abundance of Servants, no Man entertained nobler, nor paid better; he had Credit with the most considerable Bankers of the City, had no visible Estate, never gam'd but for Trifles, and even these he generally lost.

As

of the Mississippi. 7

As two People of a Trade seldom agree, this blazing Star grew the Envy of the other Beaus; Trains were often laid to find out how he could do all this, but all in vain; they made him drunk, put Whores upon him, got him into Parties at Play, but nothing would do; at last Mr. LAW having had an ill Run at Dice, resolv'd to try his Courage: An Ensign of the Guards, an intimate Friend of WILSON's was Confederate in the Plot; LAW was to make a Sham-Quarrel with WILSON; and as he would naturally consult the other what to do in the Matter, the Ensign (who is since a greater Man) was to advise him to make it up with a Piece of Money.

THIS

8 The Rise and Fall

THIS Bate, however, did not take ; for WILSON concluded, if he paid LAW a Piece of Money to prevent Fighting, every Beau in Town would follow LAW's Example, and pick Quarrels with him every Day, and so there would never be an end of it ; and therefore takes Heart-of-grace, accepts the Challenge, and meets him in Bloomsbury-Square, where LAW kills him.

WILSON was certainly what cannot be parallel'd in any History ; a Person of no Fortune, very indifferent Parts, spent above Six Thousand Pounds a Year, ran in no Body's Debt, and had no Ready Money by him when he died ; yet must have had some secret, great

of the Mississippi. 9

Support, by the violent Prosecution of Mr. LAW for his Murder.

I HAVE read a Romantick Story in the Atalantis of this Affair, in a Letter said to be writ by my Lord L-----n, in Mr. Dryden's Collection of Letters, but the whole of them is mere Chimera ; Mr. LAW hath often assur'd me that never any Lady employ'd him in this Affair, and the Manner and Means of making his Escape very different from what is there represented, but Romances must be embellished with Resemblances of Truth to make them go down.

Mr. LAW was taken up, tried and condemn'd to be hang'd ; and notwithstanding very powerful Solicitations, licitations, King William was inflexible, and would not pardon him.
D

10 The Rise and Fall

HE was carried loaded with Irons to the Prison in Southwark, where by an Opiat he had prepared for his Guards, and Files to take off his Fetters; he got over a high Wall, above two Story high, two Days before his Execution, and made his Escape, he sprained his Ankle with the Jump, yet his Friends carry'd him off to Sussex; and, in a little Time got a Boat which carried him to France.

AT his arrival at Paris, he apply'd himself to the Court of St. Germans, having always had a warm Inclination to that Party, but they were as poor as he; he had never seen an Army, nor was his Pocket strong

of the Mississippi. II

strong enough for Play; but he luckily fell in with a Sister of my Lord Banbury's, marry'd to one Seigneur, who liked him so well as to pack up her Awls, leave her Husband, and run away with him to Italy.

THEY took their first Residence at Genoa, where Mr. LAW began to study Games of Skill, as he had before those of Chance, and how to turn all of them to his Advantage; and altho' the Italians are a very subtle, cunning People, he found Cullies enough to pick up a great deal of Money from; and it was here that he laid the first Foundation of his Fortune.

FLUSHED with Success and Skill at all manner of Play, he goes from

12 The Rise and Fall

Genoa to Venice, where his good Fortune continued so, that he was worth twenty Thousand Pounds Sterling.

WITH this Foundation he began to look about him, and consider how to improve this Stock in a solid way of Trade; the Bank of Venice gave him a great Opportunity, he constantly went to the Rialto at Change-Time, no Merchant upon Commission was punctualler, he observed the Course of Exchange all the World over, the manner of Discounting Bills at the Bank, the vast Usefulness of Paper Credit, how gladly People parted with their Money for Paper, and how the Profits accrued to the Proprietors from this Paper. Having made himself intirely Master of these Things

of the Mississippi. 13

Things, he frames a Paper Scheme of his own, and resolves with it to make himself happy and great in his own Native Country.

WITH his Madam and Family he leaves Venice, goes through Germany down to Holland, and there he embarks for Scotland, where he was safe from the Murder of WILSON, because the Union of the two Kingdoms was not then compleated.

AT his arrival at Edenburgh, the Place of his Nativity, the Duke of Argyle was then holding the last Parliament, as Lord High Commissioner from Queen Anne; Mr. Laws offers his Scheme to the Parliament, but the then Lord Chancellor looked upon it as too Chimerical to be put in Practice, and so it was rejected; jected; thus was Scotland saved from that pernicious Scheme that hath since been so destructive to England, France and Holland; yet not but that it had Friends in the Scots Parliament, but they were then so intent upon an Union with England, or opposing it, that no Scheme, howsoever advantageous, would be listened to there.

Mr. LAW finding there was nothing to be done by the way of Trade in his Native Country, rather than lie idle, fell to his old Trade of Gaming; he asociated himself with Colonel Chartres, and in a little time won the Estate of Sir Andrew Ramsay, one of the finest Gentlemen of his Time, worth above twelve Hundred Pounds Sterling a Year, who after losing

losing his Estate, retired with his last Hundred Pound to Florence, where he died.

THE Union of the two Kingdoms, being now almost concluded, Mr. LAW began to look about for his own Safety; he had tried to obtain a Pardon from Q. ANNE, but WILSON had a Brother, a Banker in Lombard-street, London, who lodged an Appeal. Mr LAW upon this carries his Family with him to Holland, and takes one of the finest Houses in the Hague.

THE Dutch are a very close wary People, but will give into any thing where there is any Prospect of Gain. Mr. LAW knew this very well; he had brought with him all Mr. Neal's Schemes of English Lotteries, he improves proves upon them; and so, manages with some of the States, to whom he marked out certain Gain, that he prevailed upon that cautious Nation to set up a State Lottery, which had so much the Approbation of the People, that almost every Town followed its Example: But Mr. Hornbeck, Pensionary of Rotterdam, and now great Pensionary of Holland, being also a nice Calculator, finding out that Mr. LAW had calculated these Lotteries intirely to his own Benefit, and to the Prejudice of the People, having got about 200,000 Guilders by them, Mr. LAW was privately advised by the States to leave their Dominions.

Mr. LAW departs with his Family, which was now increased by a Son and a Daughter, and goes to Paris,

of the Mississippi. 17

Paris, just after the Death of Lewis the XIVth, when the Affairs of France were in the greatest Confusion. One Incident was lucky to him, the Death of Mr. Segnior, whose Wife he had lived with in open Adultery for so many Years, he now marries her, and legitimates the Children, sets up a handsome Equipage, takes a fine House, and by the Means of his old Acquaintance gets to Court; his good Address and Skill at Play, made him be particularly taken Notice of by the Regent, who used to play with him at Bag-gammon, a Game the Regent likes mightily, and Mr. LAW plays very well at.

THE Debts which the long War had brought upon the Crown of E France

18 The Rise and Fall

France were so immense, that it was thought impracticable to extricate it out of them.

Monfieur de Marets, who fucceeded Monfieur Chimillard in the Administration of the Revenue, found it a Weight too heavy for him to bear; and therefore on the French King's Death, desired to be eafed of that Burthen; fo the Comptroller-General of the Finances, the greateft and moft beneficial Poft in France (being the fame with a Lord High-Treasurer of England) went a begging: And altho' the Regent tried feveral, yet there was none that could undertake (with all the vaft Revenues of France, to take off that Load of Debts, which lay heavy on the Crown. Mr. LAW feeing the Regent under thefe Dilemma's, made a bold

a bold offer at once, and undertook to pay off the Debts of the Crown by Paper-Credit; and if he would clofely purfue his Scheme, he would alfo bring all the Ready Money of Europe into his Coffers; he firft laid before him my Lord of Oxford's Scheme in England, by which he paid off Ten Millions Sterling of the Debts of the Navy, without laying one Shilling Tax upon the People, by Paper-Credit, but under the fpecious Pretext of a Trade to the South-Sea; he alfo laid before him the Paper-Credit of Venice, which hath fupported that celebrated Bank for fo many Ages, and where Paper paffes better than Money, the manner of discounting of Bills in the Banks of Genoa and Amfterdam; and laft, a Scheme which he had form'd and improv'd upon them ; all which, under an absolute Government, could not fail the Ends he propos'd by it.

MACHIAVEL tells you, in his History of Florence, That the Republick of Genoa, after a long and tedious War with the Venetians, finding themselves unable to pay the large Sums of Money they had borrowed of their Subjects, thought it the best and honestest Way to set up a Bank to receive the Revenues of the Government, in which every Subject was to have a Stock to the Value of his particular Debt, and a quarterly Dividend in Proportion, of the Gain accruing by that Bank, and this Bank was called the Bank of St. George ; a great House was assign'd for the Proprietors to meet

of the Mississippi. 21

meet in, and to chuse amongst themselves Directors and other necessary Officers, and to establish proper Offices for receiving and paying ; all Bills of Exchange were paid in this Bank, Ships, Goods and Houses were insured, and even the meaner Sort could have Money at all times out of it, on Plate, Goods, or Household Furniture.

THE Bank became so rich in a little time, that the Preservation and Security of the Commonwealth depended upon it : And King Philip II. of Spain often borrowed Money of them, as several of the Kings of Spain have done since, assigning the publick Revenues of the Kingdom for paying the Interest.

A MOST

22 The Rise and Fall

A MOST excellent and rare thing, says Machiavel, never found out by any of the Ancients in their several Forms of Government, that in the same State, and same People one might see at once both Liberty and Tyranny, Justice and Oppression.

THE Regent relish'd the Scheme very well, and desired to consult some of the most knowing in the Revenue about it ; which Mr. LAW agrees to, as to the Scheme in general, but reserves the Secret of the manner of putting his Scheme in Execution intirely to himself.

AFTER many Struggles and Oppositions in the several Councils where it was examin'd, it was at

of the Mississippi. 23

at last accepted of in the Council of the Regency, and all the Princes of the Blood resolved heartily to support what would so readily pay off the Debts, and make the Crown flourish. Monsieur D'Agessau, Chancellor of France was turned out for opposing it, and Monsieur D'Argenson, Lieutenant of the Pollice was put in his room ; but the other was afterwards restored for coming into Mr. LAW's Measures, and D'Argenson turned out again for opposing some part of them : At last his Bank was established with universal Applause, all Europe run madly with their Money into it, and it seemed at once to ingross all the Ready Money of the World. Mr. LAW was made Comptroller-General of the Finances, Counsellor of State, and indeed seemed to be first Mini-

24 The Rise and Fall

Minister of State in France; more court was made to him, than ever was to any Minister in France, I have seen 100 Coaches at his Levee in a Morning, and Dukes and Peers waiting for Hours together to speak with him, and could not get within two Rooms of him for the Crowd; and yet he was of very easy Access, affable and discreet to every Body, and like a soft Mountebank on the Stage, with fine Words putting off his Druggs to every Body, without Distinction.

As he was unable to go through so great a Work by himself, William Lam, the working Goldsmith at Edenburgh, (his Brother), was ordered for London; and his first Appearance on the Exchange of London, as his Brother's Factor and

of the Mississippi. 25

Correspondent, was with Bills of Fifties and Hundred Thousand Pounds, immediately the Brokers and Jews got about him; all Remittances for France were brought to him; and if his Brother had not greater Work for him in France, he had ingross'd all the Remittances between the two Kingdoms to himself.

Before he went he Marries a Wife, and to show that he was no proud Man, took up with a Coal-sellers Daughter on Fleet-ditch very handsome; but neither Fortune nor Education, he sends his Emisaries to Birmingham, and every other part of England, where Artificers that excelled in any Trades lived, and gave them vast Incouragement to go over with him: The best Watch-makers, Chain-makers, and all other Workers in Gold, Silver, or Steel, he engages and obtains a Manufactory House too them, by the Regent's Patents at Versailles; he settles also a Bank for Remittances in the Hands of Mr. George Middleton in the Strand, and appointed him chief Banker for the grand Bank at Paris, and so sets out with his Spouse to France.

At his Arrival at Paris, Mr. Larw presents him to the Regent, as the first Projector of most of his Schemes, represents him as the best judge in Manufacture, in Silver and Gold, magnifies the vast Advantages that would accrue to France, by his having laid a Foundation of draining England of all its best Handicrafts. And so powerful his Interest was with the Regent, that at once Mr. William Larw is made, not only Postmaster-General of all France; but

but one of the chief Directors of the Bank. Altho' Mr. John Larw had one of the noblest Palaces in Paris; yet his Brother must live separately in another, different Coaches for themselves and their Ladies; but, as their Liveries were the same, one would have thought by the Number of Coaches in the same Livery, that some of the greatest Families in Europe were at Paris. While Mr. John Larw was purchasing great Estates in Land in Normandy, and other Parts of France, to convince the People that he design'd to make himself a French-Man, Mr. William Larw was not idle, but purchases two fine Estates in Scotland, the Lordship of Errol, and Mr. Stewart's Estate in Angus, in order to establish his Family in his Native Country.

28 The Rise and Fall

Mr. John Law, to make himself agreeable to the Clergy of France, who very much influenc'd the common People, turn'd, or rather declar'd himself Roman Catholick; for I don't remember that ever he profess'd any manner of Religion before: He was bred up, 'tis true, in the Protestant Church of Scotland; but, after he came to England, liv'd as other Beaus did, and, if he went to Church, it was more to see the Ladies, than any thing else: He was always a profess'd Jacobite, and was vastly serviceable to that Party at Paris; for after the Defeat of the Lord Marr in Scotland, that so many Lords and Gentlemen of his Native Country were forced to fly for France, his Table was not only open to all of them at all Times, but he got some of them very good Estates in his Mississippi, lending Money to them

of the Mississippi. 29

them to buy, and telling them when to sell; and had laid a Plan for doing more for them, if King George had not had so vigilant a Minister as the Lord Stairs to counter-act him: He was not ungrateful neither to his old English Acquaintance, who had serv'd him in Adversity, and came over to him to rejoice with him in his Prosperity, only he could not be so much with them as when in England, nor could he allow his House to be croud'd with them; but very few of them returned, I believe, without some Marks of his Bounty.

He went through all the great Offices of State, as if he had been bred and born to Grandeur; and, tho' he did a vast deal of Business by himself, was never seen in a Hurry or Confusion.

Such

30 The Rise and Fall

Such was the Infatuation of the Age, that Money came faster into his Bank than he expected or desir'd, and this rais'd the Value of his Stock higher than he design'd: He knew that this Rising could not continue long; yet he performed effectually what he undertook; he pay'd off all the Debts of the Crown of France; he fill'd the Treasury and Mint with Money, and sent Gentlemen from all the Provinces in France Home with Paper instead of Money, which they were perfectly well satisfy'd with, as were the Germans and English that ran into the Dance; and, if he had continu'd at the Head of his own Scheme, would have kept up the Credit of his Bank much longer; but Envy to see a Foreigner at the Head of the Treasury, Distrust, and Competition

of the Mississippi. 31

petition brought him under so many needless Examinations about his Conduct and Management, as render'd him suspected by the Populace, and sunk the Credit of his Bank. He knew that upon Enquiry whether the Revenues that were pay'd into his Bank for paying off the Publick Debts, they would, on a Computation, find, that that Income could not answer Dividends to the Value of the high Price of the Subscriptions; and therefore, to support his Bank, he proposes to the Council of Regency a West and East India Company, to trade to the Louisiana on the River Mississippi; and that on the imaginary Trade thither, (more imaginary, if possible, than the English South-Sea) the Bank would be supported; this was readily comply'd with, with, Books were publish'd shewing the Largeness and Fertility of that Country, extending it from the Bay of Mexico, round the English Plantations in America, to the French ones at Canada, a Country larger than all Europe: From so large a Country, what would not the Subscribers expect; 500 per Cent. was nothing! every Body run to sell their Lands in France, to purchase Shares in the Louisiana, or Mississippi; Ships were bought to begin the Navigation; young Gentlemen flocked in to be the first Adventurers, as the Scots did to their darling Darien; and, to furnish the Country with Labourers, the Punishments in France were changed for Whores and Rogues to be transported to the Mississippi.

But

But, before I proceed to my Voyage, I must tell you how we were cajol'd into this Affair.

First Mr. Folliat's Expedition was publish'd, being sent by the Count de Fontenac in the Year 1674 to find out, if possible, a Passage through the Bay of California into the South Sea; but instead of that fell into the River Mississippi, but durst not go to the Mouth of it; only discover'd, that it did not empty itself into the South Sea, but some where about Cape Florida; and so return'd to the Count at Canada.

Then Monfieur de la Salle is sent in 1676, and carries with him Father Henepen, (whose Voyage was printed in England in 1696, and presented to King William by that G Priest;

Priest;) they find out the River, sail many hundred Leagues down it, but return to Canada, without going to its Mouth, and give a very romantick Account of the Country.

Monfieur la Salle goes again in 1682, finds the River divide in two Branches, within 60 Leagues of the Sea; but not knowing which might be deepeft, he returns to Canada, and took Shipping for France, to make the Discovery to the French King, who, being an Encourager of all advantageous Projects, order'd him three Ships and a Man of War to find out the Mouth of the River; but after all his Search from Cape Florida along the Bay of Mexico in vain, he was forced a-shore under the Cape, where he dy'd.

At last Monfieur D'Ibberville, a Native of Canada, after the Peace concluded at Reswick, finding the French King at Leisure to listen to Projects, goes upon it, finds out the Mouth of this River, and builds a Fort upon it; and goes up through that vast Country to his Native Country of Canada, and then returns to France, and made such a florid Report, that the French King grants to Monfieur Crosard, his Secretary, the sole Power of granting Liberty to trade to this Country; and Monfieur Crosard, for valuable Considerations, renounces his Right to the Company, and obtains for them a Royal Charter with the following Declaration.

Company, under the Name of the West India Company; and, by his Edict of May last, remitted to the said Company the Trade to the East Indies and China: His Majesty sees with great Satisfaction, that that Company takes the best Measures for securing the Success of its Establishment; that they send a great Number of Inhabitants to the Country Louifiana, which was granted them; that many private Persons make Settlements in that Colony, and send thither Husbandmen, Tillers, and other Handicraftsmen, to manure and improve the Land, sow Corn, plant Tobacco, breed Silk-Worms, and do whatever is necessary to improve the Country. Furthermore, his Majesty being informed, that the said Indian Company is at great Charge for transporting the said Inhabitants, and furnishing the Colony with Meal, and other Necessaries, till the Land affords a sufficient Quantity of Provisions for their Subsistence; that the Company sends thither all Sorts of Goods and Merchandizes, to render the Life of the Inhabitants more comfortable; and that for preventing of Abuses, too frequent in Colonies, they have taken Care to settle the Price thereof at a moderate Rate, by a general Tariff, which Dispositions have appeared so wise and necessary, that his Majesty is resolved to favour the Execution thereof; and knowing that the Exchanging of Goods not being sufficient to carry on Commerce in its full Extent, it is necessary in the Beginning of Establishments of this Nature, to give them all possible Protection and Countenance, his Majesty is resolved to supply the said Company with a Sum of Bank Bills, to enable the Inhabitants of Louifiana to trade amongst themselves, and bring into France the Fruits of their Labour, Industry,

Industry, and OEconomy, without any Risque or Charge.

From these Encouragements we promis'd great Things to ourselves; no less than furnishing all Europe with Tobacco and Sugars, at a much cheaper Rate than England; and by being near Mexico, we should, in Time, fall into a Trade with the Spaniards for their Silver: Our Stocks rose prodigiously upon this, and the dirty Street of Quinquampois was more throng'd than Exchange-Alley at London; that the Bank thought it more convenient to remove the Jobbing to the Hotel de Soisons, where Offices were built for the Clerks and Brokers: Our first Embarkation for the Mississippi was at St. Malo; we were twelve Ships, and carry'd with us Agents, Clerks, Labourers, some Troops,

Troops, and Provisions: After a tedious Voyage, we arriv'd at Hispaniola, in the Bay, and took Pensicola from the Spaniards on the Continent, being necessary for securing our Navigation into the River, it lying almost at the Mouth of it: The Bay, which makes the Mouth of the River Mississippi, is wider than from Orfordness to the North-Foreland, and fuller of Banks and Shoals; so that it is very difficult for Ships of any Burthen to get into it, without very skilful Pilots, of which there are none as yet; it hath three large Openings, and one can hardly judge which is the Mouth, tho' they all three come out of it, except by Monf. D'Ibberville's Fort, which one hardly sees, 'till you are just upon it; after you have got into the River, it is still very shoal, tho' broad, 'till you get up to Monfieur D'Ibber-

D'Ibberville's second Fort, at both of which we are to begin our Factories, and carry them higher, as our People increases. Our Fort lies in about 28 Degrees of Latitude: The Country is prodigiously sandy; and, I must say, they might as well have sent us to the Deserts of Libia, or Barco, to have settled a Colony, as thither: We met with no Inhabitants near the Sea-side, nor indeed for a great many Leagues up the River: If you believe some People from Canada, that came to us, their Navigation down this River was from 42 Degrees to 28, directly South and North; the Mountains, Water-falls, in the Way from Canada, and Lakes are incredible; one Lake, call'd Ilenois, is so large, that they sail'd 40 Leagues over it. The different Nations up the Country, running along the Back of the English English Plantations, I leave to others to describe, that is no Part of my Business; but the Iroquois, who we were told in France were the Inhabitants, are not within a thousand Miles of it, nor any other Inhabitants: I saw for many hundred Miles but here and there some stragling Indians, Natives of Florida, and poor, innocent, harmless, People. I went up the River in a Canoe for some hundred of Miles, without seeing the Country mend, and after three Months Stay embark'd again for France.

People may talk of a Communication between Canada and the Louisiana by Land; I don't deny but it is practicable; but I should be glad to know the Use of it; for all the People of France would be too few few to plant the vast Space of barren Land that runs between.

On my Way Home we touch'd at Sir Robert Montgomery's Golden Islands, which, to my Grief, I found were as sandy as Louisiana; I say to my Grief, for I had a Share in the Bubble that was then set up at London for improving them, which I plainly saw was impracticable: In passing through the Straits of Bahama, I saw indeed some very improvable Islands, which the English have a Right to, but lye neglected, and are now the rendezvous of Pyrates: On my Arrival at St. Malo, I found the Company had swallowed up the Bank, and the Crown was swallowing up the Company; my Master Law gone to Italy, and his Brother William reduc'd: However, at my Arrival at Paris, the Company order'd der'd me to Versailles, I suppose, with a Design that I should not tell Tales; there I stay'd with my other starving Manufacturers for about a Month, and, like them, was dismiss'd without being pay'd; and glad we are all to get to Old England, without a Shilling in our Pockets, after almost three Years continual Service in the Manufactory of Versailles. I cannot help in concluding to draw a Parallel between two contemporary Families, the Craggs in England, and the Laros in France.

The first descended from an obscure Race in the Bishoprick of Durham, should, in the Father and Son, blaze like a Comet in the Meridian of London, for a few Years, and disappear without leaving any of the Name behind them.
